UNITED STATES COMMISSION
FOR THE PRESERVATION OF AMERICA'S HERITAGE ABROAD

WARREN L. MILLER
CHAIRMAN

April 6, 2010

Message from the Chairman

One of the principle missions that federal law assigns the U.S. Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad is to identify and report on cemeteries, monuments, and historic buildings in Central and Eastern Europe associated with the cultural heritage of U.S. citizens, especially endangered sites. The purpose is to help enable efforts to restore and preserve the properties. The Commission also seeks assurances from the governments of the region regarding the protection and preservation of these cultural heritage properties and encourages their restoration and maintenance.

The Congress and the President were prompted to establish the Commission because of the special problem faced by Jewish sites in the region: The communities that had once cared for the properties were annihilated during the Holocaust. The communist governments that succeeded the Nazis throughout most of the region were insensitive to concerns about the preservation of the sites. Properties were converted to other uses or encroached upon by development. Natural deterioration was not counteracted. Vandalism has sometimes gone unchecked.

The Governments of the United States and Romania entered into a Commission-negotiated agreement regarding the protection and preservation of places of worship, historic sites, cemeteries, and memorials in 1992. The agreement covers sites identified in this report. The report provides an overview of the condition of Jewish cemeteries, synagogues, and Holocaust sites within the borders of present-day Romania.

A substantial number of American Jews trace their roots to Romania. I hope this report will enable many of them to connect with their cultural heritage.

The report is mostly based on information gathered during a site survey sponsored by the Commission. Day-to-day organization of the survey was the responsibility of Dr. Ladislau Gyemant and Mircea Moldovan of the University of Cluj-Napoca. They organized research by a team of Romanian scholars. Survey work in several counties was carried out by American Fulbright scholars Christina Crowder and John Demetrick. Cemeteries were identified and visited from 1998 to 2002. The survey was organized with the cooperation of the Federation of Jewish Communities of Romania and its former president, the late Dr. N. Cajal. Additional material on synagogues and Holocaust sites was provided by Ruth Ellen Gruber and Edward Serotta.

The Commission's Research Director, Samuel D. Gruber, prepared this report with the assistance of Rahel Reger, Executive Director Jeffrey L. Farrow, Program Manager Katrina K. Krzysztofiak, and then Administrative Officer Patricia Høglund also provided assistance at various stages in overseeing the survey and preparing the report. Commission Chairman Warren L. Miller has strongly encouraged preparation of the report.

I. The Jewish Historic Sites in Romania

1. Introduction

Of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, Jewish sites are best preserved in Romania. The Romanian Jewish community survived massive loss during the Holocaust, large scale emigration (primarily to Israel), and severe difficulties under Communism. Through adroit political and cultural leadership, the community remained responsible for the maintenance of its properties and the perpetuation of its customs and history. The synagogues and cemeteries of Romania were used frequently and regularly maintained. Today, however, the size of the Romanian Jewish community is small, and its population aged. Despite heroic efforts to retain access to and control of Jewish sites for half a century, it is not possible for the small community to care for hundreds of historic sites.

2. The Survey: Methodology and Results

In 1998, this survey began in partnership with the Dr. Moshe Carmilly Institute for Hebrew and Jewish History of the University of Cluj-Napoca. Commission contractors used existing records of the Federation of Jewish Communities of Romania (FedRom) to locate Jewish cemeteries. Archival materials in several languages (primarily German, Hungarian, and Romanian) were also reviewed for information regarding the location and history of selected sites. Visits were made to all of the cemeteries identified to ascertain their current condition and to assess likely threats to their maintenance and security.

Teams of field researchers reported directly to Dr. Ladislau Gyemant and architect Mircea Moldovan of the University of Cluj-Napoca. Data collected at Cluj and other sites was translated into English. Summaries of some of the most pertinent information about cemetery conditions are compiled in table form in Appendix I.

This report provides for the first time an overview of the survey results. Some situations have changed, mostly for the better. Since 2002, FedRom estimates that approximately 300 cemeteries have begun to receive some annual care. In addition, a small number of remotely located cemeteries in which burials no longer take place have been cleaned and repaired, often through the work of international groups. Still, most of the information for all sites remains relevant, and the conditions recorded for most sites surveyed remain essentially the same.

Much of the data about cemeteries from the survey is here presented by county. The greatest number of cemeteries is located in just a few counties. In Sati Mare County, there are 105, in Maramures County, there are 65, in Slaj County 65, in Bistrita-Nasaud County at least 57, in Mures County there are 49, and in Cluj, 47. More than half of the known Jewish cemeteries in Romania are located in just six counties out of a total of 41 in the Northeast part of the country.

II. Jews and Jewish Monuments in Romania

1. History

Relatively little research has been done on the Jewish art and architecture of Romania. Since this survey was undertaken, however, FedRom has published a book about the synagogues of Romania, and, with the help of B'nai Brith International and a grant from the U.S. Agency for International Development, has created a Website¹. There are, however, still no easily accessible sources regarding the history and art of Romanian cemeteries. Only a brief account of cemeteries (Lajos, 1980) and a detailed study of the epitaphs of the Jewish cemetery at Siret (Sanie, 2000) are available, both only in Romanian language editions.

Traces of the Jewish past can be found in most areas of present-day Romania. But the location, number, type, and appearance of Jewish monuments varies in each region because of historical differences. The distinct histories of modern Romania's different parts are especially apparent in the settlement patterns of ethnic, religious, and cultural minorities, and in the distribution of different types and styles of art and architecture. The country became a unit in 1859 when Moldavia and Walachia united. Independence became a reality after the War of Independence against the Ottoman Empire in 1877-78. Sephardic Jews, originally from Spain, had settled throughout the Ottoman Empire after 1492, many throughout the Balkans, including in parts of present-day Romania.

Following the First World War, Romania annexed Transylvania and Bucovina from Austria-Hungary, which had severed those regions from Ottoman control in the late 1600s. Romania also annexed Bessarabia from Russia, and the Jewish population of the new "Greater" Romania of the inter-war years swelled from 240,000 to 750,000. Throughout the centuries, the Jewish population was regularly augmented by the settlement of Jews from Poland, Russia, Prussia, Austria, and Hungary.

The oldest known Hebrew gravestone in Romania dates to 1476, in the Moldavian city and Jewish center of Iasi. Moldavia's Yiddish-speaking Jewish community was socially and culturally an extension of Polish Jewry. Many Jews lived in Jewish towns (shtetls) and were active in trade and crafts. Not surprisingly, the decoration of synagogues and cemeteries in Moldavia is closely linked to the Jewish artistic and religious traditions of Poland (and can be seen today in neighboring Ukraine). The Jews of Walachia, especially those in its capital city Bucharest, were more assimilated.

Although the early history of Jews in the region was relatively peaceful, from the mid-19th century the new independent kingdom of Romania was characterized by anti-Semitism, including the expulsion of the Jews from some villages. The increased presence of Jews in the country after the post-World War I annexations exacerbated already present anti-Jewish sentiments. The annexations also created a national Jewish community split by language, culture, and religious rites; divisions that remained in place until the decimation of the community in the Holocaust. Today, however, there are more divisions between Romanian Jews outside of Romania than within the country.

Transylvania's Jews had been largely assimilated into contemporary Hungarian culture, and were used to enjoying civil and economic rights equal to the society at large. In Judaism, many followed the Neolog (Reform) Jewish rite, rather than traditional Orthodoxy. Jewish culture in Bessarabia, on the other hand, was similar to that of Moldavia. In Satu Mare and Maramures, however, hundreds of small Orthodox – mostly Hasidic – communities flourished until destruction in the Holocaust.

Romania's history differs from that of many countries of East-Central Europe, which lost the great majority of their Jewish populations during the Second World War and suffered the destruction of Jewish cemeteries, synagogues and other sites during the war and in the following decades. Of the approximately 800,000 Jews living within the border of present-day Romania before the Holocaust², roughly 350,000 survived the war³. Since 1945 over 90% of the survivors and their descendants have emigrated.

After the fall of the Communist Party dictatorship, estimates of the number of Jews in Romania ranged from 8,000 to 14,000, living in approximately 150 distinct localities. Today that number is probably less than half; with the majority of resident Romanian Jews over 70 years old. In 2002, the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee reported the total Jewish population of Romania as between 10,876 (the number registered with the Federation of Jewish Communities) and 14,900.

² This does not include those Jews living in northern Bucovina which had been part of Romania before the war but was annexed by the Soviet Union after 1945.

³ Because the borders of Romania were frequently changed in this century – particularly during and immediately after the Second World War – it is impossible to speak with precision of the actual numbers killed or displaced and those who survived and returned. All statistical data is inevitably misleading. J. Ancel writes in the Encyclopedia of the Holocaust (ed. by Israel Gutman, Macmillan, NY, 1990, pp. 1,292 ff.) that the Jewish population of Romania numbered 760,000 in 1930, accounting for 4.2 percent of the total population. “Some 420,000 Jews who were living on Romanian soil in 1939 were estimated to have perished in the Holocaust. This figure includes the Jews killed in Bessarabia and Bukovina in July and August 1941; the Jews who died during deportation to Transnistria or after their arrival there; the victims of the pogroms of Iasi and other places in Romania; and the Jews of northern Transylvania who were deported to Auschwitz and killed there. Not included are the Jews that had been living in the Soviet territories that Romania occupied during the war and who also perished in the Holocaust.”

2. Status of Jewish Heritage Sites

In 1989, there were 78 synagogues in active use, including 29 where daily services were held. Virtually all of these were considered by FedRom to be in good condition. Almost ten years later, that number has been drastically reduced. Today, approximately 60 Jewish communities nominally, exist with the largest in Bucharest, Arad, Bacau, Baia Mare, Brasov, Cluj-Napoca, Constanta, Dorohoi, Galati, Iasi, Oradea, Piatra Neamt, Ploiesti, Roman, Satu Mare, Sighetu Maramatiei (Sighet), Suceava, Timisoara, Tirgu Mures, and Tirgu Neamt. The major Jewish centers in 2002 were Bucharest (4,597 Jews), Timisoara (725), Oradea (552), Cluj (540) and Iasi (510). In most other “communities,” there are only a handful of Jews.

The artistic and architectural heritage of Romania’s Jews suffered tremendously during the Second World War and in subsequent years. For example, of the 125 synagogues and prayer halls in Iasi, only one survives. In Botosani, there are said to have been 72 synagogues before the war; now there is one. In Oradea, there were 27 synagogues, of which two still stand. Granted, many of these lost synagogues were stiebles – small storefront or one-room prayer or study halls with no architectural articulation. But many more substantial buildings were also destroyed. As is explained below, however, unlike in most Eastern European countries, a considerable number of Jewish sites remained in use throughout Romania after the Second World War.

Despite massive movement to Israel in the post-1948 period, a large and relatively active Jewish community remained behind. The survival of the Jewish Community as a distinct and legal entity, maintaining some authority over Jewish life and with some ability to maintain religious and cultural service for Romania’s Jews, is in large part due to the efforts of the Romania’s long-time chief rabbi, Dr. Moses Rosen, who died in 1994. Rosen managed to play a delicate political game for many years, always with the specific goal of maintaining Jewish identity with a semblance of autonomy for Romania’s Jewish Community.

In looking at the condition of Romania’s Jewish sites today, Rosen’s success is clear. Still, it is obvious that there was considerable neglect of Jewish sites due to their often remote location and a lack of funds for upkeep. Security was also a concern, and this became a special problem after 1990 when the desecration of Jewish cemeteries (or at least the reporting of such acts) greatly increased. Since then, there has been a steady stream of reports of vandalism of cemeteries. Some of this is obviously anti-Semitic in nature, and some seems to be the result of insensitive young people – what the Romanian authorities and press call “hooligans.” The survey revealed that more than ten percent of the cemeteries had experienced some vandalism in the 1990s, with ten cemeteries suffering frequent attacks. The amount of vandalism of cemeteries since the survey is unknown, but the survey documentation now provides a “baseline” condition assessment so that any subsequent vandalism – especially the removal of gravestones – can be proven.

The survey reported many undocumented instances of vandalism, which are often difficult to place in time. Other attacks, such as the desecration of the large and historic Jewish cemetery in Iasi in 2000, are better documented. Since the fall of the communist party dictatorship, attacks such as these have been readily publicized by the Israel Agency and other organizations encouraging the emigration of Romanian Jews.

Throughout Rabbi Rosen's tenure, the Jewish Community continued to decline in numbers, and since the fall of the Ceausescu government in December 1989, the rate of diminution of the Jewish population has accelerated. Older Jews who survived the Second World War are dying. Younger Jews, often very well educated, have left Romania in large numbers for Israel and America. Together with the overall decrease of the Romanian Jewish community, however, there is also the phenomenon of some communities growing, as people identify themselves as Jews for the first time, a process familiar throughout Central and Eastern Europe. The total effect of these trends has been greater consolidation of the Jewish community into just a few active centers. Each of these, in turn, is now responsible for the care of a greater number of cemeteries, synagogues or former synagogues, and other properties.

3. The Situation Since 2002

In a letter dated February 5, 2002, Romania State Secretary for Foreign Affairs Cristian Niculescu wrote Commission Chairman Miller that the Romanian Group for the implementation of the 1992 Agreement between the U.S. and Romania on the Protection and Preservation of Certain Cultural Properties "is determined to identify, protect, restore and create new museums and documentation centers of Jewish cemeteries, synagogues, monuments and related cultural properties, assuming these monuments are part of the Romanian cultural patrimony." Among the priorities of the Romanian government were the establishment of an Elie Wiesel Museum in Sighetu Marmatiei (Sighet), which opened in 2002, the establishment of a Museum of Romanian Judaism, and the revamping of the Dr. Moses Rosen History Museum of Romanian Jews, now housed in the Bucharest Great Synagogue⁴.

Also in 2002, the Romanian Government turned over ownership of all Jewish cemeteries to FedRom, and passed an ordinance providing stiff penalties for the desecration of Jewish cemeteries, synagogues, and other sites. The ordinance stipulated that construction in Jewish cemeteries cannot be undertaken without the prior approval of the Federation of Jewish communities and "must respect Jewish law and traditions." Penalties for violations range from fines to 25 years in prison.

Since then, the pace of identification, maintenance, restoration and protection of Jewish sites has accelerated in Romania, especially regarding cemeteries and synagogues in areas where there are still Jews, or where are buried relatives of living Jews. The policies, priorities, and procedures adopted by FedRom after the return of properties, however, have not been entirely popular. There has been tension between FedRom and various international Jewish groups that seek to restore cemeteries and synagogues. These include the Association of Jewish Romanian Americans, led by David Kahan of Brooklyn. The disputes are partly based on jurisdiction, as the Federation tries to rein in and control interventions at cemeteries unauthorized by FedRom. There has also been conflict over priorities. This is in part understandable, as each descendant or survivor group naturally wants to see the sites of special significance to he, she, or it restored and protected sooner rather than later.

Since the time that the survey was carried out, Kahan, as well as the Brooklyn-based Heritage Foundation for Preservation of Jewish Cemeteries (HFPJC), have been involved in more than a dozen cemetery projects in Romania. Since 2004, the HFPJC has been coordinating with descendants and others about work at about 40 additional sites. As part of HFPJC's method, gravestone epitaphs are transcribed and names collected. HFPJC tries to locate and recruit descendants and relatives to help fund projects. As an Orthodox group, HFPJC has had noticeable success. According to its reports, HFPJC has restored cemeteries in Babeni, Banisor, Beclean, Crasna, Halmeu, Hosszumez, Hunedoara, Lusca, Pir, Sacel, Strimtura, Telciu, Urisor (Alr) and elsewhere⁵.

Many Americans have inquired about Jewish heritage sites in Romania. Some have visited the country. Finding information about the location and condition of sites has often been impossible, however, and access to all but a few Jewish sites for visitors to Romania has been difficult. Recognizing this, in 2002 B'nai Brith International began a partnership with FedRom to promote Romanian Jewish heritage sites. The Romanian Jewish Heritage Trail, which consists of an on-line map and information on a number of important sites throughout the country, was created but work on it was not continued⁶.

In 2003, following controversial statements regarding the Romanian Holocaust made by the Romanian Government representatives and then-President Ion Iliescu, an International Commission on the Holocaust was created. It presented the results of its work in September 2004. Included in it was a proposal by Commission Chairman Miller that Romania build a national Holocaust memorial in Bucharest. The government of Romania accepted the recommendation and has built a memorial. Later, a Romanian Holocaust Academic Learning Resource (RHALR), co-sponsored by B'nai Brith

There are some recent and ongoing instances of local Jewish communities, municipalities, and private foundations working together to develop heritage sites – mostly former synagogues in Transylvania and Bucovina – as educational, commemorative and tourist centers.

For example, in 2005, a proposal was developed to create a new Jewish Museum and Family Learning Center in Oradea, to focus broadly on the lives, contributions, and fate of the Jewish people of Northwestern Transylvania⁷. In Simleu Silvaniei (Transylvania) the former synagogue is now the site of a permanent Northern Transylvania Holocaust Memorial Museum, opened in July 2006⁸. Also in 2006, a group organized the restoration of the two cemeteries and related monuments to the victims of the Iasi Death Train in the towns of Podu Iloaiei and Targu Frumos⁹. There is also an international group of descendants and survivors from Radauti in Bucovina, which is dedicated to the documentation and protection of the cemetery, and also hopes to assist in the restoration of the impressive synagogue¹⁰.

III. Synagogues, Cemeteries, and Holocaust Monuments

1. Synagogues

a. Number and Types of Synagogues

As of September 2002 there were 98 synagogue buildings in Romania, 54 of them functioning as synagogues, and 44 closed or being used for other purposes¹¹. Numbers vary from source to source (as well as the names of some synagogues and their addresses)¹².

There are two main types of Romanian synagogues. In Transylvania, buildings are similar to synagogues in Hungary: they tend to be large, impressive and elaborately decorated, and date mostly from the late 19th and early 20th centuries. These synagogues were mostly built as part of the Hungarian Neolog Reform movement when Transylvania was part of Hungary. There are also simpler synagogues, particularly in northern Transylvania, home to a greater number of Orthodox and Hasidic communities.

In Moldavia, the synagogues are mostly nondescript on the outside but highly decorated inside with elaborate folk painting and lavish wood carving. Examples can be found in Dorohoi, Botosani, Tirgu Neamt, Falticeni, and other sites. The interior of the synagogue at Buhusi, for example, is filled with wall paintings representing the zodiac, the months of the year and dream-like visions of the Holy Land. Most of the decorated synagogues in Moldavia have similar decoration. The synagogue in Botosani, which is said to be the earliest of this group, is nearly 250 years old and is remarkable for its intact, original lofty painted ceiling with representations of Jerusalem, zodiac signs and symbols of the Twelve Tribes of Israel.

Throughout Romania, especially in Moldavia, many of the historic centers of villages and small towns were almost totally demolished under the “urban renewal” policies of the Ceausescu regime. This destruction has been documented in The Razing of Romania’s Past by Prof. Dinu Giurescu. For the most part, synagogues were spared during the massive urban renewal programs of the Ceausescu regime, though many of the historic structures – such as the Choral Synagogue in Bucharest and the small synagogues at

Dorohoi – now exist entirely out of their original urban and architectural context, which has been replaced with desolate empty lots or large-scale anonymous housing blocks.

b. Maintenance and Care of Synagogues

Most of the Romanian synagogues that survived World War II remain in relatively good condition. Since 1990, however, several synagogues have been sold by FedRom since the buildings were no longer needed for worship.

The Government of Romania and FedRom developed the Action Plan for the Protection of the Jewish Heritage, which was adopted by the Romanian Government. Through this initiative, there will be some government involvement in the protection and restoration of Jewish historic sites, particularly those that have been listed as national historic monuments. Several synagogues fall into this category.

In Cluj, the Dr. Moshe Carmilly Institute for Hebrew and Jewish History, a department of Babes-Bolyai University, is housed in the former ‘Shas-Hevrah’ Synagogue. The building, erected in 1922, was in use as a synagogue into the early 1990s. It then closed, was used as a warehouse, and now houses the Institute.

In a few cases in the 1990s, before the adoption of the Action Plan, synagogues were purchased and then demolished by the buyers. This was the fate of a synagogue in Reghin and the Vointa Temple on Dacia Avenue in Bucharest, even though it was a listed national monument¹³.

The most visible projects for synagogue restoration include the initiative of the Jewish Architectural Heritage Foundation, founded by American Adam Wapniak, which has joined with local organizations in Simleu Silvaniei in Transylvania to restore the former synagogue and to create a permanent museum and educational center¹⁴. The Northern Transylvania Holocaust Memorial Museum, housed in the former synagogue, was opened in July 2006.

FedRom also enters into contracts where the beneficiary does not pay rent, but is committed to renovate the building. This is the situation in Tarnaveni where the synagogue has been rented to the Tarnava Mica Cultural Foundation, and in Timisoara where, since 2005, the synagogue has been rented to the Philharmonic Society. The society has received some funding for the restoration of the building, including an initial grant from the World Monuments Fund to develop the restoration plan¹⁵.

¹⁴ See: <http://www.jahf.org/index.asp>

¹⁵ See: <http://www.socfilarmonicatim.ro/project/project.htm>

According to FedRom, “In Oradea, all three synagogues are rented: one serves as a carpentry workshop and the other two as warehouses. In Bucharest, one synagogue out of six functions as a liquor and bread warehouse for the Jewish community. Some places of worship reach the final solution: they are sold or demolished.”

2. Cemeteries

a. Number and Type

The exact number of Jewish cemeteries in Romania is uncertain. The Commission survey visited 698 cemeteries. Other sources have cited slightly higher numbers, but without lists. In 2002, when cemeteries were returned to FedRom, 689 Jewish cemeteries were listed, including nearly 500 in localities where Jews no longer live.

The survey identified 17 cemeteries which retain more than 5,000 gravestones, and 42 with between 500 and 5,000 stones. On the other hand, however, there were 391 cemeteries with between 1 and 20 stones, and 13 sites still identified as cemeteries where no gravestones were visible. Most cemeteries date at least to the 19th century. The oldest identifiable stone in 536 cemeteries dated from the 19th century. Only ten cemeteries were identified where stones could be clearly dated from the 18th century. Still, the history of Jewish settlement in Romania suggests that the greatest number of settlements and, therefore, cemeteries date from the 19th century.

The survey identified 439 cemeteries which served no other function, while 103 cemeteries also were the site of some agricultural activity, and 179 were now primarily used for agriculture. Common agricultural uses include animal grazing, harvesting of hay and gardens. Only a very few cemeteries were used for waste dumping (nine), or industrial or commercial activity (one). As of 2002, 441 cemeteries were receiving some care – mostly clearing of vegetation. In 259 cemeteries, stones had been cared for; and walls or gates had been repaired in 56. New gates or walls had been erected at four cemeteries. This number has increased since 2002. The greatest difficulty in managing Jewish cemeteries in Romania has been the relatively remote location of so many – particularly those in the Northeast. These cemeteries, usually small in size, have suffered over the years from neglect. Erosion and vegetation have been more destructive than vandalism, although often neglect has led to vandalism. Most rural cemeteries are not completely fenced and they are often located in now heavily wooded areas – often new woods that have grown up on cemetery sites since the Holocaust.

At the time of the survey, only 61 cemeteries had no wall or fence to delimit or protect them, but 89 had no gate and 159 had gates that did not lock. Still, 498 surveyed cemeteries had experienced no vandalism, while only ten had experienced frequent vandalism since 1990. Eighty-nine cemeteries had experienced some vandalism. Erosion due to weather was the greatest threat to 555, however. Three hundred eighty one cemeteries faced a threat of excessive vegetation, and 311 uncontrolled access. Only 18 faced a threat from incompatible nearby development.

Most cemeteries did not have a sign or marker. Twenty-three had signs in Romanian, ten of which mentioned Jews. Ten were marked by Hebrew inscriptions on the wall or gate, and 30 cemeteries had Jewish symbols (usually a six-pointed star) on a wall or gate. There was no marker at 626 cemeteries.

About half of the cemeteries have been fenced in or restored in some other way in recent years. All or almost all of these were well-maintained.

Many Romanian Jewish cemeteries are particularly significant for the high level of stone carving of the gravestones. Cemeteries such as Piatra Neamt, which is seriously overgrown, and Siret rank among the finest repositories of Jewish folk art in Central Europe. The gravestones in the many cemeteries in Transylvania and the Satu Mare region are less ornate than those in Moldavia and Bucovina.

b. Care of Cemeteries

Many Jewish cemeteries in Romania have been well cared for since the Second World War, with regular caretakers assigned to them. These local caretakers have traditionally been members of the local Jewish communities, and have often been volunteers. In places where there are no Jews, the nearest Jewish communities have sometimes hired local people to look after cemeteries. Some cemeteries have received care, including some restoration work, funded by the Romanian Jewish community in Israel.

A fairly typical example of the needs of a cemetery and how it has been cared for is in the case of the cemetery in Tîrgu Lăpuşn (also known as: Magyarlăpos and Tîrgu-Lapus/Lapus/Targul Lapusului/Targu Laposului/Targu Lopus/Targul Lapush/Tiriu Lapus). Located in Maramures County, 32.1 kilometers SE of Baia Mare, the Jewish community is responsible for the site. In 2000 there was both a regular caretaker paid for by contributions and occasional financial help for restoration from Israel. With 470 stones, the cemetery is the largest in the region.

An ohel (structure protecting venerated graves) at the cemetery was rebuilt by visitors from Israel. It contains the gravestones of two rabbis. Visitors have also restored several other graves, but their methods, which include new concrete footings for upright stones, and cleaning and painting of some gravestones, do not generally follow conservation methods recommended by professionals. The highlight of gravestone incised inscriptions with black paint is especially popular. This makes epitaphs much more legible, but it may also lead to deterioration of the stone.

The cemetery contains a variety of stone forms typical throughout the region – double stones, obelisks, multiple stone monuments, etc. One section of the site (approximately 300 sq. meters) was annexed to a neighboring garden in 1944 or shortly thereafter and the stones were removed (and were at one time seen in the foundation of the adjoining house). A fence was erected in 1990 and a locked gate now protects the cemetery from most unwanted intruders, but children from the neighboring school are eager to get in and play amongst the stones.

3. Holocaust Monuments

There have been a small number of Holocaust monuments erected in Romania, mostly since the fall of the Ceausescu government in 1989.

In July 1991, Bucharest dedicated its first monument to victims of the Holocaust in front of the historic Choral Synagogue, the center of the country's Jewish communal life. The inscription on the monument explicitly refers to "German, Romanian and Hungarian fascists" as the perpetrators of the murders of 400,000 Romanian Jews. The stark bronze monument is in the form of a giant menorah set on a marble base. Separate from the main monument, along a wall flanking the forecourt where the monument stands, is a list of the various places of death and the numbers of people killed in each place. At the dedication of the monument, Nobel laureate Elie Wiesel unveiled a plaque commemorating the murder of 150,000 Jews in Transylvania, where he was born. The ceremony was also attended by Rabbi Arthur Schneier, then Chairman of the U.S. Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad.

A prominent figural monument to Holocaust victims sent to German camps, by sculptor Izsák Márton, was erected in Dej, but most other monuments are located in Jewish cemeteries. These include a monument in the cemetery of Dorohoi to victims killed on July 1st, 1940, while attending a funeral in the cemetery, and a "Star of David" monument in the cemetery of Radauti dedicated to those "who did not return"¹⁶. At the cemetery in Podul Iloaei there is a monument to those who died on the Death Train from Iasi¹⁷. There are no longer any Jews in this town but the cemetery and monument are well maintained. There is also a monument to the victims of the Iasi Death Train in the Jewish cemetery in Roman. In the Jewish cemetery of Camarasu Deal-Sarmasu, there is a dramatic memorial commemorating the 126 Jews from the village of Sarmas who were massacred by Hungarian soldiers.

In Cluj, the former main synagogue on Horea Street is now known as the Synagogue of the Deportees and is a memorial to the people deported to German camps. In Iasi, in a garden across from the city's one surviving synagogue (out of more than 100), there is a memorial to the more than 13,000 Jews killed in June 1941. In the cemetery, there is another memorial to the victims. Part of the complex includes their mass graves.

In Satu Mare, which gave its name to the Satmar Hasidic group, a monument was dedicated in 2004 to the memory of the 18,000 Jews of the town and surrounding area murdered in the Holocaust. The monument is an eight-ton block of stone set on a pedestal, situated between the town's two surviving synagogue buildings. An earlier monument is in the Orthodox cemetery, in the form of a chapel with the names of thousands of Holocaust victims¹⁸.

In 1946, survivors returning to the Transylvanian city of Oradea erected a monument in the courtyard of the Great Orthodox Synagogue. In 2003, the monument was rededicated and new explanatory memorial plaques in English, Romanian, Hungarian and Hebrew were installed nearby, as part of the commemorative complex¹⁹.

According to the Website of the Jewish Community of Oradea, "the commemorative ceremony took place under the religious officiating of Iosif Adler, Chief Cantor of the Coral Temple in Bucharest. Participants included Mr. Pertu Filip, Mayor of Oradea, Dr. Tiberiu Benedek from Bucharest, representing the Federation of Jewish Communities of Romania, Mr. Felix Koppelman, President of the Oradea Jewish Community, religious leaders, as well as other City, County and political officials. Many of Oradea's one hundred living survivors were present, as were their children, grandchildren and friends. Members of the local media covered the proceedings and the several newspapers, radio stations and televisions stations carried the story."
